

Connections

A Two-Minute Thought by Eric

God decided to use me in a way that He never has before. What you are about to read is proof positive that there are no coincidences and that everything that happens, happens for a reason.

I recently wrote a devotion about divorce. The reason I wrote it was because a good friend of mine was going through a separation and it reminded me of when my wife and I were first married. So, I seized the opportunity to share my experience about that subject.

Just a few days ago, I received an email from a customer of mine. She explained that she and her husband have been having some problems and that the arguments had been getting progressively worse. They were at the point of contacting divorce lawyers to take the next step.

And then God stepped in.

She couldn't explain what drew her to my website, but she ended up here and read this devotion (The 'D' Word). And what happened next is what floored me. She went on to tell me that she and her husband have been taking steps to rediscover each other and that things have been getting better. And if it weren't for finding that specific devotion at that specific time, that they would likely be in the middle of a divorce. Glory to God for turning this storm around! I don't know if they made the commitment to remove divorce as an option, but the key is that God intervened when everything was in place and everyone was ready. God decided to use my experience for the benefit of someone else and, in doing so, is cultivating yet another victory for His Kingdom. And He's known this would happen all along!

And this brings me to the point of the title: Until I received that email, writing that devotion seemed like dropping flyers from an airplane. I didn't know who read it, if anyone. It was simply an experience that I shared, just like the rest of my devotions. But, as soon as that email came in, I was able to start identifying some of the connections that had occurred that got us to this point. And there are MANY connections that span a 10-year time frame (that I can recall) and likely even longer. It was like reading the end of a mystery and being able to look back over the story to find the clues.

We don't get to see the outcome of every person's story very often, especially in a "broadcast" environment like the Internet. But every now and then, God will let us peek at a little part of the book He's writing. And it is incredible. Sometimes unbelievable. God is the amazing author of our universe and it's amazing how no detail is missed and every connection is relevant. So, never underestimate God's ability to take ANYTHING and turn it into a victory!

So, how will this story continue? God only knows, but don't you want to be a part of it?
